 The pool is empty, or so it seems,
 A small ball of grey fluff sits
 On the concrete.
 A faint sound filters through the quiet
 Meow such a small sound it is - Meow
 I am drawn down the chrome ladder
 By the mournful cry;
 The grey puffy cushion is a kitten
 Alone, afraid, abandoned
 Its whiskers are stiff white wires
 Its velvety paws are pussy willows
 Bright green eyes question me
 "Will you be my friend?"
 Forever, friend, forever
 Come with me. We are going home.

Years ago, there lived a boy named Albert Einstein. Albert was a strange boy. He had trouble remembering some things. Also, he was not very neat. It was a difficult job for him to tie his shoes. However, he knew how to play the violin very well.

He did not like to play marbles or ball like others his own age. Instead, he enjoyed looking for hours and hours at the shape of a leaf. He liked playing with wooden blocks.

He was not interested in the boys in his neighborhood who invited him to play war. He liked to chase the white chickens that scratched in the garden. He wanted to try to make friends with them.

Albert felt happy only with his little sister, Maja. He loved her very much. She looked just like him. They were as alike as two drops of water.

Sometimes Albert's cousins came to visit. They tried to get him to join in their games. "Albert is stupid" they said.

Albert did not like school. He did not like history and geography. He would not learn any lessons by heart. He was interested only in learning arithmetic.

"It would be nice if you could leave school, Albert," a teacher told him one day. "You don't listen. Your interest in class is poor. You set a bad example for the whole class."

Albert did not like sports. His classmates called him Albert the incapable.

Albert was very different from other people. When Albert grew up, he never lost his interest in the world and in science. He became a great scientist.
